REFLECT

(1) Marbz used the image of a river to describe the impact of justice: "We live in between two pictures - the world as it ought to be where God's justice reigns (Rev 22:1-2) and the world as it is right now with all these polluted rivers." What rivers of injustice do you observe around you? Think about those that affect you, but also take the time to think beyond your own sphere...

(2) You have heard it before: Jesus is REALLY good news for us. We often think about it in regards to our personal salvation (which is true!) but it is so much more than that. How is Jesus good news for the injustices in the world? Read Matthew 12:15-21 to help you think of the good news through the lens of justice.

(3) At the end of Marbz's sermon, he led us in a prayer for those who want to step into God's work of justice and/or for those who seek to trust Jesus' victory in the injustices they are experiencing. You will find these prayers written out in the sermon transcript. Reconsider this, pray it again, and ask Jesus for what your next step is.

Share your thoughts with one or two people who can keep you on track.

PRAY

Fill me with gratitude for the cross. God, give me a fresh revelation of your heart so that I can know the depth of your love for me. Open the eyes of my heart to see, think and feel as You do.

PRACTICE

As disciples of Jesus, we shouldn't be content with spending our time just talking about justice. The practice of 'See Think Feel' is designed to help us to see more like Jesus sees, think more like Jesus thinks, and feel more like Jesus feels. Download the guide.
